Learning outcomes

During graduation, the student demonstrates research skills at final level (level 3). This includes the learning outcome below:

- The beginning financial professional demonstrates research skills while carrying out an assignment in the financial-economic field. The beginning financial professional does so by contributing to a feasible solution to a practical problem in a methodical, substantiated and responsible way. The beginning professional develops by critically reflecting on his own choices.

In addition, the student demonstrates part of the competence of professional advice and communication. This involves the behaviour in the field of written communication:

- You communicate in writing in an effective, clear and correct manner.

Content

You write a research report individually or in a duo, which is followed by an individual criterion-Based-interview (CBI). The combination of research report and CBI must show that you can complete a full research cycle. The research results in an advisory report for a client, possibly including one or more professional products. The research focuses on one or more core subjects of your study program.
