Analysis

Level 3

The novice practitioner can independently analyse socio-legal issues within a complex context within a well-defined and complex context, taking account of environmental factors and drawing on multiple legal, socio-cultural and other non-legal sources. They contextualise this information in a social, societal, cultural and personal framework and identify the various influenceable factors:

1. The student identifies the facts of a complex socio-legal situation from the legal practice and/or an open question involving multiple actors. The student adopts an integral approach and contextualises the facts in a social, societal, cultural and personal framework.
2. The student acts in a methodically responsible manner, designing their research project on the basis of theoretical insights, the results of social sciences research (or other areas of research), relevant legislation and case law;

3. The student conducts applied socio-legal research with the aid of relevant research methods and techniques;
4. The student analyses research results and formulates relevant conclusions and recommendations;
5. The student justifies all choices regarding the use of sources, research methods and techniques, either verbally and/or in writing;
6. The student discusses the strengths and limitations of their research and explains how these affect the resulting outcomes/recommendations.

Consultancy

Level 3

The novice practitioner conducts thorough legal and/or social science research in order to provide the client (individual or organisation) a comprehensive recommendation. This recommendation concerns a complex socio-legal issue involving multiple stakeholder interests and a range of potential solutions or approaches. The student provides a verbal and written explanation as to how they arrived at their recommendation and explains which solution or approach seems best suited to the client:

1. The student identifies the complex socio-legal issue through consultation with the client and other relevant actors;
2. The student reports on their findings and recommendations in a

The graduation research forms the conclusion of the program. During two blocks you will set up and execute a graduation research in an organization. Through this graduation research you will show that you, as a starting 'HBO jurist', can set up and carry out research, and that you have mastered relevant competences at the highest level. The graduation research can therefore be regarded as a final aptitude test. In the graduation research the emphasis lies on the independent execution of a practice-oriented research which is communicated orally and in writing. The quality of the research and the reporting is assessed by the program. The external client gives an opinion on the applicability in practice.
