Analysering (general description)

Before creating a professional product, the legal professional must analyse the legal practice. Next, they must formulate the relevant legal questions in support of their position in the case. The legal professional must have adequate research skills, systematically selecting and gathering relevant legal sources, such as legislation and case law. Their analysis process should include the gathering, selection, qualification and analysis of information on the practical situation, the resulting relevant facts and legal sources. The legal professional must complete all stages of this process in order to deliver a satisfactory professional product.

Advising (general description)

After clarifying the legal question at hand, the legal professional investigates the relevant facts, positions, interests, legal sources and applicable legislation. Having analysed the situation, they then provide a reasoned recommendation - either verbally or in writing - in the appropriate format and terminology. Their considerations provide insight into the underlying process and their understanding of aspects such as customer friendliness, effectiveness, usability and support.

Comprehensive collaboration (general description)

Working under supervision, the SLS student is able to collaborate on complex but well-defined socio-legal practical assignments aimed at addressing multiple issues in an integrated and systemic manner.

Inhoud

This course provides an in depth introduction to the minor International Law and relations. Topics of study are the development of international organisations before 1919, the League of Nations, the United Nations and the European Union, concentrating on their history, functioning and institutional framework. The lectures will also discuss Theories of International Relations and themes related to the notion of progress in International Law. Furthermore, recent threats to the post-1945 liberal world order, such as climate change, the Ukraine crisis, international terrorism, the migrant crisis, the rise of China, Brexit and the populist danger for democracy will be addressed.

By the end of the course students will write an essay based on the topics above.
