Inhoud

In today’s complex information age, forward thinking communication professionals are continuously challenged to master the most demanding communication frontiers in creating engaging, strategic, and relevant content and information valued by their most important target groups, as well as making their client company stand out from the crowd. To this end, online marketing mix tools have an overwhelming impact on today’s society and businesses.

The student finds out how online marketing communications can be instrumental in achieving organisational objectives in a relatively complex business context from a client’s perspective. Students work in project groups and assume the role of a marketing communication advisor for a real (inter)national client company. Their task is to scan and monitor existing online content related to one of the client’s brands. Students carry out research to identify the most important market segments and the competitors. Subsequently, students develop target group profiles and brand positioning that is consistent with the core values of the client. In the final stage, students create content, making use of creative texts and visuals, and present their advice and content to the client.

In Visual Communication, students learn how to produce the content for their client. They learn the basics of photography, and of the programmes Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Lightroom. Storytelling also plays an important role in this block.
